PACKERS A CONTENDER

By Art Daley - Editor, Green Bay Packer Yearbook

The Packers had a winning record in 1978.

Does it follow that the 1979 Packers will improve on that reading of 8-7-1 . . . and possibly get into the playoffs?

There are a lot of answers to that question. The players and fans would answer in the affirmative. The coaches would hedge a bit, maybe quite a bit.

There is an interesting parallel here and it goes back to 1959.

That was Vince Lombardi's first year at the Packer helm. He inherited a team that went 1-10-1 in 1958 and turned it into a 7-5 winner.

In the first Packer Yearbook in 1960, Lombardi said this:

"I think we'll have a better football team in 1960, but that doesn't mean we'll win more games. Maybe we'll be lucky to do as well. We won't catch anybody by surprise this time. They'll be looking for us."

Lombardi's 1960 team finished one notch better, 8-4, and reached the championship game.

Now, 20 years later, Coach Bart Starr faces a somewhat similar circumstance. His team leaped from 4-10 in 1977 to a surprising eight victories a year later.

Starr, in his spring Packer Prospectus, said this:

"We made significant progress last year, despite our inability to win more games in the final half of the season. Those losses to stronger teams vividly illustrated our shortcomings.

"However, we have steadily been acquiring the type of men who will be our leaders for several years to come and the experience of barely missing a playoff spot will provide a new plateau from which to seek a championship."

There is a great deal of difference in the two regimes.

Lombardi took over a good, young group of players (Starr, Paul Hornung, Jim Taylor to mention a few) who were just moving into their prime. It was a case of filling in a few soft spots while concentrating on winning.

Starr faced the monumental task of first building a team and then trying to win. That job was slowed considerably at the start because the meat of his first two drafts had been traded away.

Presently, Starr appears on the verge of developing his own carefully drafted players into a playoff contender. Obviously, good and/or better athletes are always welcome but the current crop has demonstrated that it can cut it with all but four or five of the 27 opponents in the league.

The 1978 Packers were exceptionally young, especially at key positions like quarterback (David Whitehurst) and middle linebacker (Mike Hunt), but this didn't hamper the club until the homestretch last year when inexperience might have been a factor in some crucial games.

With the departure of Willie Buchanon, Jim Carter and Steve Odom, the Packers will be just as young in 1979 but they'll benefit immensely by the successes and the misfortunes of '78.

The past season was indeed one of great heights and extreme lows. In fact it seemed like two seasons, the first half when the Bays produced a 6-2 record and appeared headed for a playoff berth and the second half's 2-5-1 record, the low point of which was a 14-0 loss to the Bears in Chicago.

The Packers' main concern in 1979, next to overall team strength, will be the offense. This unit scored 179 points in the first eight games and only 70 in the second half. For example after a high of 45 against Seattle in Game 7, the Packers scored totals of 7, 9, 3, 14, 3, 10, 17, 0 and 14.

The defense, other than a 42-point lapse against the Dallas Cowboys, who had just lost three in a row, played fairly steady all season, giving up an average of 18.4 per game.

The defense will have to make up the nine interceptions Buchanon provided a year ago — plus the experience of Carter, who backed up Hunt. Estus Hood, a sharp-looking cornerback as a rookie last year, replaced Buchanon and tough Paul Rudzinski will battle Hunt for starting status. The Packers had 27 interceptions last year and the linebackers had six, including five by rookie John Anderson and one by Hunt. Hood, despite his reserve role or the fifth man on special defenses, had three intercepts.

The defense again will be anchored by the big Book Ends, Ezra Johnson and Mike Butler. The key to improving the tackles rests with Charley Johnson, a quick and strong third-round draft choice out of Maryland. He'll fight with Carl Barzilauskas, Dave Roller, and Terry Jones.

Gang tackling has sharpened the Packers' defense against the rush. Here six Packers converge on Tampa Bay's Ricky Bell.

Amazing as a rookie last year, Anderson figures to come back strong along with veteran Gary Weaver at the other outside linebacker. For the defense to be more effective, especially against the rush, Hunt or Rudzinski will have to improve in the middle.

The defensive secondary could even be faster with Hood in Buchanon's spot. Mike McCoy will operate at the opposite corner and the two hard hitters will be at safeties — Johnny Gray and Steve Luke, who had five interceptions together last year.

The offense was given a major boost in the draft, with the selection of two good running backs — Eddie Lee Ivery, No. 1, and Steve Atkins, No 2.

These two will create great competition among a half-dozen veterans, headed by 1,000-yarder Terdell Middleton and iron-strong Barty Smith — not to mention Duane Thomas, the onetime Cowboy great who is hell-bent on making a successful comeback, reliable Eric Torkelson, the swift Walt Landers and Nate Simpson and Jim Culbreath.

James Lofton, who caught 46 passes for a 17.7 average last year, and Aundra Thompson, who averaged 20.3 yards on 26 catches, will be tested along with veteran tight end Rich McGeorge by three highly-touted draft picks — wide receivers Ron Cassidy and Frank Lockett and tight end John Johnson, plus holdover TE Paul Coffman. A third wide receiver to replace Odom will be needed.

The offensive line returns intact and this unit could be the major force in making the offense go. It'll be competitive up and down the line with four tackles — Mark Koncar, who missed '78 with an injury, Tim Stokes, Greg Koch and Gerald Skinner; three guards — Derrel Gofourth, Mel Jackson and Leotis Harris; and centers Larry McCarren and Rick Nuzum.

The rest of the offense is up to young Whitehurst, who returns with a stronger shoulder due to off-season surgery. This will be David's second season as a starter and it will be the key to his and the Packers' future. Behind him are Lynn Dickey, trying to make a comeback from a broken leg, and sophomore Dennis Sproul—plus rookies Michael Rieker and Kyle Grossart.

The special teams will miss Odom, a fixture at punt and kickoff returns last year, thus creating a problem for the new special teams coach, Fred vonAppen. Punter David Beverly had an off year in '78 and he'll have plenty of competition from draft picks Rick Partridge and Bill Moats. Chester Marcol hit 11 of 19 field goal attempts last year but, other than a game winner vs. Tampa Bay, was inconsistent.

And there you have it . . . a team on the move . . . upward!

How Packers Were Built

Coach Bart Starr's commitment to the college player draft as a means of bringing the Packers back to championship level started to pay dividends in 1978 when the team posted an 8-7-1 record and tied the Minnesota Vikings for first place in the Central Division. Twenty-three draft picks made the Packers in the last three years, eight in each of the last two years. Two 1978 picks made the NFL's all-rookie team — Linebacker John Anderson and Wide Receiver James Lofton. Here, at a glance, is how the Packers were built and it must be remembered that these players will be challenged by the 1979 crop of draftees and free agents.

JAMES LOFTON

'I Don't Think I Did Enough'

By Jill Lieber
Milwaukee Sentinel

James Lofton wants the best in life.

The Packers' 22-year-old wide receiver isn't satisfied with being a well paid No. 1 draft choice in the NFL, a highly touted collegiate star or a world class long jumper. He wants more. Much more. He wants something money can't buy.

"In no way have I attained everything I want in life," Lofton said. "I'm nowhere near the top. I plan on being in pro ball for a short period of time, and when you look down the road 15 years from now, that is the part of my life that will count. That is when I will start realizing my goals. That's when I will really be happy.

"I was somewhat frustrated in my first year as a pro," he said. "I don't think I did enough. I appreciate the things I have attained, but I know I could have done better.

"I guess in the past it seemed like a lot of things just came to me and came easily. But if I would sit back and think about it, I had to work hard for everything. I had to wait to get into Stanford. I had to wait to get into the pros. I had to wait to set a world record. And now, I have to wait for my day in the sun."

But Lofton did have his day in the sun — in only his first year in pro football. The Los Angeles native finished second to Al Baker of Detroit for NFC rookie of the year honors, and he was named to the Pro Bowl.

Lofton came into town with a bang. He was a highly praised rookie. A media happening — to the point, he said, of overkill.

But the former Stanford star was able to adjust to life in a fishbowl and found ways to shrug off outside pressures.

"Rookies get undue attention," Lofton said. "They are showcased because they are top draft choices. My second season, I will be called a brilliant second year man. And by the third or fourth year, if I have made notable accomplishments, I'll be referred to as one of the prominent people in my position.

"It was both a help and a hindrance being the No. 1 draft choice. I still had to perform my very best every game, no matter what. But I guess because I was the top draft choice, people expected more out of me — and they expected it right away.

"I don't think anybody should expect that of anyone. One in two million make it in the NFL. It's hard to be a starter — some guys never are. But to expect someone to be a superstar is ludicrous.

"I admit," Lofton said, "I never doubted I'd make the team, and I never doubted I'd be a starter. I sensed my place before the season ever started. But I still had to achieve a certain amount of confidence in the system, and I had to prove to the coaches that I could do the job.

"Then, I had to prove to my teammates that I could make it. Training camp was hard for me. There was a certain amount of jealousy. Everyone wanted to know how much I was making. That bothered me, and it made me go out of my way to show them that I was just one of them. That was wrong. I realize now, that you have to be very realistic about making money in sports. A business man wouldn't work 16 hours a day if he didn't know he would be paid. It's more than self-pride that motivates you, especially in pro sports. I want to do a good job, but I also want to be paid. Football is too hazardous to be played without being paid.

Lofton is a fun loving guy, a person who's loaded with an infinite amount of energy. He is bright, a B-plus student in industrial engineering. And he is witty ("Me serious? Have you ever known me to be serious?" he kidded).

But during his first year with the Packers, he became increasingly quiet and introspective. Being thrown into the limelight caused him to draw inward. Glamour? He didn't find much of that. Women? He had to search hard for sincerity. Personal appearances? He accepted only three autograph sessions at auto dealers and furniture stores. Loads of endorsements? He did just one commercial, and he isn't even sure it ever got on the air. Recognition? That made dining out a hassle. And he said he may never get used to the cold Wisconsin climate.

"There were a lot of disappointing moments during my first season," Lofton said. "The most disappointing thing was not making the playoffs. It seemed so possible, so attainable, but then it just slipped through our grasp.

"The billing of superstar was a bit hard to handle, too. That label has nothing to do with who's the better player. It's just media hype.

"Sure I'd love to be a true superstar, but I know that would take away from my anonymity. I'd take the pitfalls that went with it, though, if it meant having the best team in pro football.

"One reason I liked Green Bay so much, is that there I am able to be myself. It's easier to be a 'normal' person because the town is so small. Once the people get to know you, it doesn't matter anymore who you are.

"You hear from players in other cities about a hero worship type thing. People are very concerned with knowing pro athletes in places like Dallas and Atlanta. People have the idea that a pro athlete has a more glamourous life than their own. And that's so wrong."

Lofton makes sure that he knows himself. Having a strong self-identity is just one of the signs of his maturity.

He has always been a highly motivated person, having been raised in a middle class family where the importance of achieving in both school and athletics was stressed. While his friends were giving in to peer pressures and getting involved in stealing and experimenting with drugs, Lofton was making a name for himself as a leader both on and off the athletic field.

That self-discipline has carried him a long way in life.

"My first year in pro football wasn't the most taxing year physically or mentally for me," Lofton said. "It was much harder for me in college. Then I was striving to achieve excellence both on and off the field and trying to have fun doing it.

"I applied to engineering graduate schools for the fall of 1978 in case I didn't get a chance at the pros, and I got into every school that I applied to. I didn't really want to go, though. I think about my friends who are in the business world, and I know I would have been in real trouble if I had gone out into the job market.

"I am sure a lot people feel that a career in sports if very narrowing. But when you think about other jobs, what's wrong with playing football? I am enjoying something that is very expressive and enlightening. We all seek out those two things in both work and play.

"And I know there are those people who criticize and say that pro athletes never know the 'real world' until they retire from pro sports. Well, I think the NFL is the real world. In fact, the competition is much harder in the NFL than in the real world. It's the best job security I know of, and it offers short term gains.

"And the pressures in the NFL are so much greater than most people will ever know, because people say, "We know you can play football, but what else can you do? You are expected to be able to do many things well. You are expected to be successful both on and off the field, and you are expected to be successful when your career is over.

"Not everyone can do that. But that's a very important concept to realize and one for which an athlete should strive."

Receivers James Lofton and Aundra Thompson show who's No. 1 for photograper Vernon Biever as Packers beat Bears in Green Bay.

Wide Receivers, Passer, Virtually All Rookies

The meat of the Packers' 1978 passing game was virtually rookie from thrower to receiver.

James Lofton, who caught 46 balls, including at least one in each of the 16 games, made his pro debut after a spectacular career at Stanford.

The other wide receiver, Aundra Thompson, actually was in his third Packer season but it was his first as a starter. He missed 1976 with an injury and played as a replacement in 1977.

Passer David Whitehurst, thrown into battle due to Lynn Dickey's injury late in the 1977 season, started every game as a sophomore in 1978.

Lofton and Thompson caught 72 passes between them for 1,345 yards, an average of 18.6 per catch, and eight touchdowns. Thompson had the best average, 20.3 on his 26 catches. Lofton averaged 17.8 yards on his 46.

Despite a leg injury, Lofton finished off the season with five grabs for 92 yards against the Rams in Los Angeles. The previous Sunday on the ice in Chicago he caught four for 96 yards.

Thompson was drafted as a halfback out of East Texas State in 1976 and then was shifted to wide receiver.

The Packers had one other classic example of college halfback who made it as a receiver. That would be Max McGee, the fleet halfback from Tulane, who was shifted to offensive end as a rookie in 1954 and finished up as the Pack's No. 3 all-time receiver with 345 catches in 11 seasons.

Incidentally, McGee and Thompson were both fifth round draft choices.

Coach Bart Starr reflects seriously after victory over Saints in Milwaukee Sept. 10.

THE INTANGIBLES:

'Character Will Win Every Time' - Bart

By Lee Remmel - Green Bay Packer Publicity Director

A portrait of a leathery, bewiskered cowboy, complete with battered gray stetson, occupies a place of prominence on the mahogany wall of Bart Starr's impeccable office.

Beneath it, in italicized script, is a pithy and pungent message: "There are a helluva lot of things they didn't tell me when I hired on with this outfit."

It is a classic example of the Packer coach's highly developed sense of humor, seldom on public display, which miraculously survived the manifold tribulations of 4-10, 5-9 and 4-10 seasons in his first three years as Green Bay's resident leader, then flourished during 1978's upbeat 8-7-1 campaign.

There was one thing, however, that no one had to tell the new head coach and general manager when he signed on the morning of Dec. 24, 1974 with a dossier that reflected singular achievement as a player but only one prior season as an assistant coach.

The former field general, whose cerebral gifts at quarterback had triggered the Packers' acquisition of five world championships during the memorable '60s, already knew one salient fact of football life — that it is the so-called "intangibles" which are indispensable to winning . . . Even more so, in the final accounting, than such obvious athletic assets as size, speed and strength. Though elusive and difficult to measure, these insubstantial elements thus have become central concerns in his comprehensive, brick-by-brick rebuilding program, now in its fifth year.

Like the noted author, Chesterfield, Starr is convinced "you must look into people as well as at them," which, for most recent example, explains why he and his staff made Georiga Tech's Eddie Lee Ivery their first round choice in the 1979 National Football League draft.

Understandably, they were not unmindful of Eddie Lee's considerable statistical accomplishments, which included a national single game rushing record (356 yards) and a host of school marks. But the Packer coach was even more intrigued by the final sentences in the Ivery biographical sketch that appeared in Tech's 1978 press guide. They noted, in customarily cryptic style, "Captained team as a senior . . . Represented football squad on Tech Athletic Board" (a blue ribbon group which annually includes members of the university faculty and administration).

Starr made the significance of these items to the total evaluation explicitly clear on draft day. "There were a number of reasons that we liked Eddie Lee," he said, "but mainly because of his character."

Proceeding to document his point, the Packer coach reported, "his coach, Pepper Rodgers, told me he thinks Eddie Lee has just an outstanding attitude. He said his practice and work habits each day are those of a guy who is trying to make your football team — not an established player. And that is the kind of player that we're looking for."

Starr's appraisal evoked the inevitable question. How important he was asked, is this intangible of character?

"It's very important," came the prompt and unequivocal reply. "We feel that character wins every time. Not necessarily in a short race. But in a distance race, which is what we're concerned with here. It will win every time."

As might be expected of one with his enviable record of leadership and accomplishments, the man who quarterbacked the Packers to three consecutive titles (1965-66-67), has a precise and personal definition of this impalpable commodity.

"I think character is the foundation, the structure of an individual, which is the very basis of his being," Starr said. "It shows itself in many ways. It's vividly on display in times of crisis. It clearly speaks when one wins or loses. It's the fiber of which we're made and some, thankfully, are endowed with a much stronger fiber than others."

During his long association with the Packers, which now dates back nearly a quarter century, the insightful Alabamian has found this immaterial quality manifested to a high degree by a number of those who have worn Green Bay's green and gold, both individually and collectively. He also has discovered it to be present among those enduring loyalists, the Packer fans, who have become something of a National legend themselves.

Starr agrees with the late Vince Lombardi that, from a team standpoint, the 1965 Packers were a sterling and memorable example of how an inflexible will and unswerving commitment can compensate for physical shortcomings. Lombardi had said of them, in fond tribute, "This is not the greatest team I've ever coached, but it has great character."

Today's Bart Starr says. "I feel the same way about that team. I also felt our '67 team was very strong in character. I know what Coach Lombardi was referring to with respect to 1965 because it was a year in which there were numerous injuries and we were constantly on the brink of being eliminated from the race. And yet, somehow the team found a way to hang in there . . . So you could easily identify with what he was saying.

"I have felt our teams in recent years also have had a lot of character, because we were glaringly short on talent.

Bart Starr displays Central Division winning smile for media after victory over Bears Oct. 8 and explains a point after loss to Raiders Sept. 17, both games in Green Bay.

Yet our people have given everything that we have asked of them. They have worked extremely hard. Those who have been with us since we started here are going to reap the fruits of those efforts. We've had some people here who have been outstanding leaders, even though they were not surrounded with much supporting talent. I'm thinking about people like Johnnie Gray and Steve Luke on defense, who began their careers here the year we came in. They have been the backbone of the spirit of our defense.

When the Packer coach reflects upon his playing past, one name springs immediately to mind as the premier example of courage and idomitable resolution.

"Tobin Rote epitomized the word character, as far as I was concerned," he says. "I had the pleasure of rooming with him on the road my rookie year. I learned a lot about courage and guts from him. He was a player who, only because of his personal strong will and flaming desire, succeeded when he really didn't have a supportive cast around him. He took some terrible beatings. Yet I never heard him complain. He was a real man. When he was traded to the talented Detroit Lions in 1957, he replaced the injured Bobby Layne and led the Lions to a championship. Had he been accompanied by the team strength which surrounded me in the 1960s, he would have been more outstanding."

Are there other intangibles he considers vital to success in the athletic arena, or does he feel all such elements as attitude, perseverance and commitment are encompassed in the term "character?"

"I think they're all wrapped up in character," he rejoined. "There is an interweaving of these traits. We place a great deal of emphasis on attitude here. We feel that everything that we do is a reflection of our attitude. You could say the same thing of the word 'character,' I suppose. A person who possesses great attitude usually is the person with strong character, who does not lose his equilibrium in difficult situations, who never gloats in victory nor is remorseful in defeats. All of us are disappointed after a loss but we must learn to live with defeat and profit from the mistakes which caused it.

"Almost anyone can exist in a winning atmosphere — it doesn't take much talent at all. To survive in a losing atmosphere, come out of it, and build something that will stand the test of time, is what growth is all about. I've pointed several times to the character of the Dallas Cowboys, because they developed theirs from a humble beginning, punctuated with frequent losses, to a level where few teams have won more in recent years."

Ever the positive thinker, Starr is convinced character can be acquired.

"I think all of us have the latent ability to grow and to develop character," he said. "Our surroundings, our background, our home life are factors which contribute significantly to this ability.

"It's like becoming a better leader. I agree with Coach Lombardi, who said leaders are not born, they are developed. Obviously, some people have a greater capacity to lead than others, but I also think all of us have the ability to be far better leaders. If you're fortunate enough to be in an atmosphere where others will help you grow and magnify your strengths, as well as shoring up your weaknesses, you can be a much stronger leader than you ever thought possible."

After what has been a painstaking and often traumatic reclamation and rebuilding process, spanning four seasons, Starr sees the essential ingredients of spiritual maturity and solidarity coalescing in his young team, which even now averages only 24.5 years of age.

"I feel we have an excellent start on developing the type of character, team-wise, that we will need to sustain ourselves in the coming years," he says. "We have good people, we're getting better, we're getting more people with better attitudes, with more heart, with more character than we've had before. As we get these better people, then we're going to be a better football team."

'I think that a sense of humor lightens the load.'

A collateral element, a happily unchanging constant, has played no small role in making this growth possible, Starr is quick to assure.

"There's no question that the fan support which the Packers receive, world-wide, is a unique intangible which we can rely on," he said. "I don't know that you can properly or adequately describe, what the fanatical support which we receive means to a player, to a coach, to a team. It's an indescribable feeling to receive this type of backing. That's why I feel our fans are just the world's best."

There is one final intangible which is critical to both artistic and psychic survival in the NFL, the Packer coach has discovered.

"A sense of humor," he surprisingly insists, "is absolutely essential. Life can be so frustrating that if we're not able to laugh at ourselves the journey, at times, is almost unbearable.

"I don't think you can ever take yourself too seriously. I think you must be dedicated and serious in your approach to anything, but if you don't allow yourself the luxury of laughing at your own mistakes, you dig a quick grave because none of us is perfect. We can strive for excellence — that's attainable — but perfection isn't.

"I think that a sense of humor lightens the load, makes the trip a lot more pleasant and helps develop the total person ... I really enjoy being around people who know how to laugh, and are willing to."

Greg Koch, Tim Stokes and Gerald Skinner; Guards Mel Jackson, Derrel Gofourth and Leotis Harris; and Centers Larry McCarren and Rick Nuzum.

These nine all agreed to join a raft of rookies for a mini-camp last May, thus laying the groundwork for some terrific competition during the season.

Coach Bart Starr was pleased with the genuinely favorable response from the offensive linemen and noted that "they're workers — every one of them."

Last season the Packers lost the outstanding left tackle, Koncar, in the first pre-season game for the entire season but the offensive line, playing together for an entire season for the first time, helped to boost the offensive punch immensely — points, up 115; TDs rushing from five to 16; Terdell Middleton gained the 1,000-yard club; almost doubled TDs passing, from 6 to 11; and averaged 27 yards more per game.

Not bad considering the inexperience and new starters, but not up to the high standards of excellence that Coaches Bill Curry and Ernie McMillan, themselves, set as all-pro linemen, and presently as offensive line coaches.

"We played very well at times last season," said Curry, "and we made some very critical mistakes, ones we shouldn't have and couldn't afford to make, in crucial situations. People tend to look at our early success last year, and our later lack of success and break the season into two distinct halves. But in reality there wasn't that much difference in our play over the entire season. We just made some errors at some doggone inopportune times. We can't afford to do this and will not in '79. We'll approach the new year as one of continued learning and progress, not one of fragmentation, of complacency with half a season where things went our way."

Curry added rather dryly: "We now have some people. I don't think there is a harder worker in the NFL than Larry McCarren. He's proven what work and strength will do. Outside of him, Derrel Gofourth and Mel Jackson have a year under their belts working together as starters, but they'll really have to scrap to fend off the challenge of Leotis Harris, who we think may be of starter caliber already. Koncar's return to left tackle will cause us some very pleasant problems there, as well."

Decisions such as whether to start

Gerald Skinner

Koncar ahead of Stokes, who played very well last year, or Koch who also played well are the ones Green Bay coaches will enjoy facing for a change.

"We'll also be faced with some real tough decisions at cutdown time, which means that the overall quality and depth of your squad is improving. We think some of the most serious competition on this year's team will take place in our offensive line, and we look forward to that with a good deal of enthusiasm," Bill said.

Again this year Curry will work primarily with the centers and guards (he played both with Green Bay, Baltimore, Los Angeles and Houston for 10 seasons) while McMillan will handle the tackles and tight ends. Ernie, together with the Packers' Forrest Gregg, was the standard of excellence at offensive tackle during the '60s and '70s, when he was named to four Pro Bowl teams and twice All-Pro. And although their playing careers bear garlands of achievement, their ability to communicate and teach has already won rave reviews from their husky pupils.

Cohesion, experience, familiarity with his fellow player; all these are important — mandatory criteria for success, and the Packers are developing this highly prized ingredient, together with the physical talent to perform to high standards.

McMillan, following a distinguished career at both right and left tackle with the Cardinals and Packers, highly values depth, communication and competition. "Competition upgrades the team tremendously. The players recognize it and react accordingly. Everything and everyone's a lot more intense. The guy who isn't playing has game experience and he can help the others who are playing . . . with their techniques, their opponents' moves and everyone's assignments. Plus, there's the emotional factor. Players can pick each other up when things aren't going well; encourage the guy who's out there; keep him up, and help his concentration.

"When Bill and I split up (guards and centers with Curry, tackles with McMillan), we can get a lot more accomplished. The individual work can be a lot more concentrated. We can analyze opponents, walk through assignments and get a lot more done. There are a lot more things you can do to prepare."

This season, following a year of rehabilitation, Koncar returns and the benefits of an expanded weight training program will be felt throughout the forward unit of the Pack, which like most offensive lines, seldom receives its just recognition.

This will be a year of continuing improvement. Yardsticks of progress were evident in '78, but improvement upon that will be the minimum goal of this year's team.

Stokes, obtained in a trade with Washington after Koncar was hurt last year, went the entire season at Koncar's left tackle position. This year he'll scrap with both Koncar and Koch at right tackle, thus heightening the competition. Being right-handed and having some experience as a swing tackle, Stokes feels he'll have no problem on the right side.

Agewise, the nine offensive linemen are very similar to Ringo and his gang when they started to jell. The present linemen average slightly over 25 years of age, and Stokes is the elder citizen at a young 29. McCarren and Nuzum are 27 and Koncar is 26. Skinner and Jackson are 25 and Koch, Harris and Gofourth 24.

Terdell Middleton sneaks a peak behind on his 76-yard touchdown run against the Lions Oct. 1. James Lofton is his escort and the Lion is Luther Bradley.

TERDELL . . . 'Things Never Come Easy for Me'

By Bob McGinn
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Terdell Middleton first got the hint that destiny might be beckoning in 1978 when the early Packer depth chart was released.

It showed Barty Smith the starter at one running back position. Then, at the other, it revealed:

RB — Terdell Middleton, Nate Simpson, Eric Torkelson.

The message was then pounded home loud and clear in early September, moments before the Packers took the field for the season opener against the Detroit Lions at the Pontiac Silverdome.

"We got over to Detroit, this is a true story, and I told him before the ballgame, I said, 'T.D., you're going to stay in the ballgame. You're not coming off that field unless you crawl off,' " recalled Bob Lord, the team's former offensive backfield coach, adding "He carried the ball 28 times that day and that to me was the beginning."

That "beginning" would eventually lead to 1,116 yards and a Pro Bowl assignment for Terdell (T. D.) Middleton — and nothing less than a rebirth of the Packers' moribund rushing game. With it, woven inextricably, came a resurgence in the Packers and a Central Division co-championship with the Minnesota Vikings.

For Middleton, the season signalled one of the most startling instant success stories in club history.

The Packers selected Middleton with their third-round draft pick in 1977 because of his physical qualities. He had speed and he had power.

But for a wide variety of reasons Middleton spent more time as a freshman picking splinters than picking holes. He gained just 97 yards in 35 carries and ranked behind fellow halfbacks Willard Harrell, Torkelson and Simpson on the depth chart.

Thus, when Middleton learned of his starting status, or at least the opportunity to win the job, he was naturally enthused.

"I had been working out hard anticipating coming back into Green Bay and working in toward a starting position," remembered Middleton. "(Then) from day one, I was the No. 1 halfback. It seemed like the timing was just right. They were thinking along the same thoughts and lines as I was. The opportunity was there and I just made sure I took the best possible advantage of it."

Middleton had always been a hard worker. An outstanding hurdler and long jumper, first at Southside High in Memphis and then at Memphis State, Middleton understood and was willing to pay the price for success.

"Ever since I was in high school I used to go down and work out on Sundays all by myself, just running track," he said. "Then you'd come back on Friday or Saturday afternoon at a track meet and win a lot of trophies and people are saying, 'My you're lucky.' They really didn't realize what I put into it.

"That's the way I was back in Memphis during the offseason last year. I worked out all the time. People were surprised when I came back and had the year I had, but I had worked for it. Things never came easy for me.

"I always had to compete for my position," he continued earnestly. "Even in college. They had one guy, he was a starter at wide receiver, and I was a starter at running back. Two starters to compete for one position. I had to deal with that, I had to keep my head on. I didn't get that much playing time 'til the latter half of the season after the other guy got hurt. Nothing has just ever been handed to me. I worked for it, so I feel I earned it and I deserved it."

Middleton was as strong and as fast in 1977 as he was in 1978. But the mental aspect of the pro game and its stringent concentration requirements mystified him.

"I found it kind of a mental strain on me," recalled Middleton. "Being able to think on your feet, while things are going on around you. Like you run a play off tackle and you got to know how to read your tackle's block and know how the linebackers are flowing, and where the hole's at, and how the defense's reacting.

"I had to go home at night and study and study and study. I never really studied like that at Memphis State, but I knew I had to do it to be able to contribute."

Still, Middleton had all that talent — and he appeared on the verge several times of cracking the starting lineup.

Lord said Middleton's problems stemmed from lack of mental toughness.

"Although he had shown good physical toughness at Memphis State, I rated his mental toughness with the Packers as not tough enough," said Lord, now special teams coach with the New York Giants.

"One time, I think it was Monday night at Washington, T.D. got nicked a little bit. Coach Star asked him, 'T.D., are you ready?' and he said, "No, I'm not.' And he never did get back in. And of course you know the rest of the storybook last year is that he gained over 1,000 yards. He held up, he played with little hurts, a fact I appreciated very much."

Why didn't Middleton exhibit that toughness immediately?

"It's a mystery because at Memphis State he carried the ball three out of three times," continued Lord. "It was student body right, student body left. On film, he'd jam off tackle and hit up in there and he really took a pounding. He'd get up and get ready for the next play. So, to me, maybe that rookie lapse . . . sometimes a rookie comes in and is feeling his way and so forth, he's got a pocket full of money . . . all of a sudden other things are a little bit more important."

But Lord had seen enough of Middleton to know that if he returned to camp "mentally tough," as he phrased it, he would win the position hands-down.

"I put him there (first on the depth chart)," said Lord. "I just felt that his native ability, he had good speed, weighed 200 pounds, and I told Bart that there is no doubt in my mind that if he came back mentally tough he'd be head and shoulders above the rest.

"And he proved us to be a prophet. He had that ability all the way. He has great feet, runs with power and he has excellent speed."

The 6-foot-0, 200-pounder didn't waste any time bursting into the NFL's statistical leaders or becoming a favorite among the Packer populace.

His 91-yard output against Detroit, a modest effort for more well-to-do teams, was like a godsend to the Packers. It was the highest total by a Green and Gold ball carrier in 25 games.

Middleton followed with 114 yards against the Saints in Milwaukee, his first of five 100-yard games, before he cruised back into County Stadium for a return engagement with the Lions. With his offensive line gradually developing into a capable unit, Middleton slashed behind crisp blocking for sweeps of 19, 15, 25 and then 76 yards in a 148-yard afternoon. His 76-yarder was the longest dash by a Packer since Jim Taylor went 84 yards in 1964.

"The Lions run was the longest I had in my career," said Middleton, savoring recollections of the 35-14 victory. "We came in fresh and our whole offensive team was hot. The line was really coming off the ball."

Respect was something the Packer infantry corps hadn't received since John Brockington put the finishing on the third of his three consecutive 1,000-yard seasons in 1973.

In 1977, for instance, the Packers' rushing output of 1,464 yards was the lowest since the 1958 team, which finished 1-10-1, gained merely 1,421 yards in 12 games.

But with Middleton, the Packers finally had a back who was quick enough to locate a hole rapidly, powerful enough to run through arm tackles, elusive enough to juke tacklers and fast enough to outrun secondaries. Defenses had to plan accordingly.

The offensive line seemed to relish blocking for such a threat.

"I think all the guys realized that our running game wasn't up to par," said Middleton. "Our offense as a whole wasn't really up to par where it would have to be to be able to win consistently. I think all the guys individually had in the back of their minds . . . let's all work hard together. And it just so happened I came through with 1,000 yards and I think that was just great for the whole team."

Through 10 games, Middleton gained 842 yards for a hefty 4.7 average and the Packers were 7-3. But in the 10th game, at Philadelphia, Middleton suffered a painful hip pointer injury.

He didn't practice the week before the Dallas game Nov. 12, remembered "feeling awful, really low" prior to the contest, and emerged with just 29 yards, his poorest effort of the season.

As the Packer offense stagnated down the stretch, and as defenses began figuring out ways to stop Middleton, his production waned. Middleton gained just 274 yards in the last six games, a meager 2.6 average.

"People started keying on me. I'm nobody. I'm not that good of a guy," thought Middleton. "I'm not a Payton or a Dorsett. I kept having good games and people started becoming more aware of me. Like I kind of found it hard for people to be keying on me already. I had just come into the league, struggling and struggling, trying to do my best, and then I got defenses already keying on me. I just couldn't believe it."

Middleton proved conclusively that he had the toughness needed to play the pro game in Game 13, a classic 10-10 overtime deadlock with Minnesota. Middleton was called on 39 times and responded with 110 yards — putting him over the 1,000-yard plateau.

"I never carried the ball that many times, but it really felt great," recalled Middleton. "I took a pretty good beating throughout the whole year. I knew I had to be physical as far as taking a blow and being able to come back and play. I got pounded, and it did wear me out some. But I just tried to hang in there just as tough as the first part of the year."

"Middleton also partially disproved the rap that he was a chronic fumbler — he said he had seven fumbles in 284 carries — and that his hands, rated "below average" by Lord when he entered the league, were good enough to catch 34 passes for a 9.8 average.

Back home in Memphis again during the offseason, Middleton lived in an apartment near his parents' home, relaxed and generally basked in the warm afterglow that unexpectedly sweet success can leave.

"It's a milestone in my career," he said matter-of-factly. "I've never rushed for 1,000 yards before. It's pretty important for a running back to accomplish a feat like that. It gave me great satisfaction. It's a pretty good feeling."

But Middleton took exception to the suggestion that his satisfaction was even the remotest form of contentment.

"Right now I wouldn't want to sit here and say that I'm expecting to be an all-pro this year and make 1,000 yards like I did last year," he said firmly. "I'm going to go back to Green Bay with the same attitude I had last year, but with just a little bit more confidence and another year of experience under my belt.

"I don't see a reason why I can't be an all-pro," he continued. "All that work wasn't in vain. It makes me want to go out the next day and do even better. I attained all these things. Just think if I work twice as hard.

"I don't have long-range goals. I'd rather just go through the season week-by-week and do the best I can and all the other honors will come in place and follow right behind: A 1,000-yard season, it will come, and touchdowns, and all the recognition and honors.

"If I can keep my head on straight, and my attitude, I can last a long time in this league."

He may also last a long time at the top of the Packer depth chart.

THUNDER and LIGHTNING

at Defensive End

By Don Langenkamp
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Just two short years ago, Ezra Johnson announced to Green Bay Packer fans that he and fellow rookie defensive end Mike Butler were "thunder and lightning."

"If one don't get you," vowed Ezra, "the other one will."

It turned out to be a stunningly accurate forecast. Back in 1977, Ezra's boast was made without credentials to back it up, but in only two seasons he and Butler have established themselves as one of the National Football League's most devastating defensive end tandems. And in just one season where both were starters, they have built a mystique that indeed leaves enemy quarterbacks believing that if one doesn't get them, the other one will.

Johnson thundered through blockers to drag down the quarterback 20½ times in 1978 and Butler complemented that with 11½ more sacks. That accounts for 31 of the Packers' 48 quarterback sacks – the highest team total since Green Bay's salad days of 1966.

And, incidentally, this isn't the first "thunder and lightning" the Packers ever had. In the 1960's, the Pack had T and L on offense, Jim Taylor and Paul Hornung, who were labeled thunder and lightning, meaning merely that Taylor provides the big crash and Hornung strikes everywhere.

But let's turn back the pages of time for a moment, to draft day, 1977. The drafting of Butler out of Kansas as the Pack's first pick was no real surprise to anyone around the league. The Washington, D.C., native had impeccable credentials – size, speed, agressiveness and four years of playing time in the battle-tested Big Eight Conference.

Johnson was quite another matter. When he was announced as Green Bay's choice in the first-round pick the Packers had gained from the Oakland Raiders as part of the Ted Hendricks deal, many observers expressed surprise and some openly doubted the wisdom of taking a 225-pound defensive end from tiny Morris Brown College.

But Coach Bart Starr saw it differently. "We were aware of his lack of complete training because of his college background," recalls Starr. "But the one thing that continued to surface when we worked him out and saw films of him was his athletic ability. It just jumped off the screen.

"We recognized a person coming from that sort of background that it could be a little bit of a gamble taking him that high. But seeing his athletic ability and looking at the board, we were concerned he wouldn't be there in the second round. I would have preferred to have him early rather than missed him completely."

Butler and Johnson became fast friends even before arriving in Green Bay. They met on the plane enroute to a press conference where they would go through the contract-signing formality and decide to room together in Green Bay.

But it would take a year before they cemented their relationship on the field. While Butler was almost immediately thrown into the breech as a starter at right defensive end,

Johnson saw just limited action during his rookie season and chafed on the sidelines while he saw his roomie improve game after game.

"That second year," Johnson now says with quiet satisfaction, "was just a whole lot more fun. I improved a lot after not playing a lot my rookie year. I think my pass rush improved with some new moves."

Johnson's new moves combined with his legitimate 4.5 speed in the 40-yard dash turned him into a holy terror as a sophomore. He served notice on enemy quarterbacks that they were on his most-wanted list from Day One. In the season opener against the Detroit Lions, he registered five of the team's eight sacks and had Lions offensive tackle Lynn Boden talking to himself before Boden was removed from the game.

Said Ezra later, "I didn't really pay attention. My mind was geared to the quarterback."

Along with those five sacks, Johnson picked up a $60 kitty from that Detroit game. He and Butler, enterprising souls that they are, decided it would be nice if each of the team's defensive linemen — Bob Barber, Carl Barzilauskas, Dave Roller and Terry Jones included — would throw $10 apiece into a "sack pot" each week.

While Johnson never matched those five sacks in one game the rest of the year, he had enemy blockers always weighing his next move. And over on the other side, Butler kept steady pressure on passers and became an increasingly stronger defender against the run.

But it was Johnson who claimed the final dramatic moment of the season. In his first year as a starter, he played his final game in the Pro Bowl. It is a personal goal he hopes to again achieve in 1979.

"They're having the Pro Bowl in Hawaii, and I've never been to Hawaii," he says. "But what I'd really like most is for the team to make the playoffs."

Close friends that they are, Johnson and Butler are pulling for each other to gain those Pro Bowl post-season honors. But can both of them make it? It would be a rarity and there are only a couple of All-Pro tandems in recent NFL memory. The likes of the Minnesota Vikings' Jim Marshall and Carl Eller, or the Los Angeles Rams' Jack Mike Butler is happy and at peace after Packers' 28-17 victory over Saints in Milwaukee Sept. 10.

Youngblood and Fred Dryer give the Packer bookends something to shoot for.

Defensive Coordinator Dave Hanner feels the potential is there. "Definitely so," he says. "You don't see that much quality too many times."

The two defensive ends are looking for the type of improvement that comes in many ways but ends up in the same word — consistency — this season. Both have exhibited the ability to make the big play. Both are supremely gifted athletes in the physical sense. Both, in short, have all the tools. The task ahead is to keep learning more sophisticated techniques and eliminate the mistakes that are the by-products of inexperience.

"To be a dominating player, you have to make the big plays, and make them consistently," says Butler. "I think I became a more consistent player last season."

One of Johnson's goals is to improve against the run. "I want to be known as an all-around defensive player," he says.

And Johnson has another goal that would be welcomed by the coaching staff, especially in light of the fact that the young defense will be even younger in makeup without one of its elder statesmen of a year ago in the departed Willie Buchanon. "I think," Ezra quietly says, "I'm capable of helping lead this team."

Probably one of the most attractive characteristics of the Johnson-Butler duo is that they fit ideally into their assigned slots. At 6-foot-5 and 265 pounds, the massive Butler plays the strong side, and therefore more often than not, meets the opponent's running attack head on. Johnson, 25 pounds lighter and faster, can use his lightning-quick pursuit to drag down ball carriers from the other side of the field.

"Butler is more physical and he has fine quickness and speed," says Hanner. "Johnson has that great quickness and speed, but he can't control a blocker quite as well.

"But together, they're a great influence on our defensive team. They both can make the big plays. They force the other team to keep a back in on passing situations and that creates a problem for an offense."

Hanner, the man on the coaching staff closer to the two than anyone else, feels his talented tandem has just scratched the surface of its pro potential.

"So far, most of the things they've been doing are off instinct and natural ability," he says. "It's the experience they get the next two or three years that counts. They are two or three years away from their great potential."

Johnson devotes his off-season to what he calls "recuperation . . . give the old wounds time to heal." But he also has given some thought to surpassing last year's 20½ quarterback sacks — the second-highest total in the NFL. "I'm not sure if I can do that, but I'd definitely like to," he says.

Butler in turn, does not begrudge his buddy the lion's share of the sacks. It is, after all, a team effort and it just wouldn't do to let statistics stand in the way of a close friendship.

"Most of the time, I might take an inside rush and force the quarterback to step up," he says. "And Ezra will wipe the quarterback out. Sometimes it works the opposite. It's not a predetermined thing — it just happens that way."

Which is simply another way of saying if the lightning doesn't get you, the thunder will.

Linebacker John Anderson just misses recovering fumble by Bucs' Doug Williams and Louis Carter in Packers' 9-7 victory in Green Bay Oct. 29. Anderson intercepted five passes during season and was named to NFL All-Rookie team.

HALLS OF FAME

Halls of Fame are much like the all-pro teams.

It provides a source of argument for Mr. and Mrs. Joe Phan. Football fans all have favorite players and they can't often agree who's the best.

Packer fans are highly prejudiced, of course. And it goes way back. Green Bayers always figured Clarke Hinkle was better then Bronko Nagurski and ditto Charley Brock over Bulldog Turner.

When Jim Taylor went into the Hall of Fame at Canton, Ohio, Packer people asked: What about Paul Hornung?

There are three Halls of Fame in operation.

Nationally, there is the Professional Football Hall of Fame at Canton. On a state basis, there is the Wisconsin Athletic Hall of Fame at the Milwaukee Arena. And locally, there is the Green Bay Packer Hall of Fame in conjunction with the Packer Hall of Fame Museum less than a block away from Lambeau Field.

The Packers have 13 stars in the Canton shrine and 14 in the State Hall. Thus far, 70 former Packer players and contributors have been selected in the Green Bay HOF.

It is extremely difficult to gain the Canton Hall of Fame because the Packers are in competition with all the star players from the 27 other teams in the National Football League. The State Hall doesn't open often for Packer players because athletes from other sports are included. The Packer Hall of Fame has no problem selecting electees and for a few years named 8 to 10 from each of the first five decades.

Selections from the National Hall are made by a Board of Selectors made up of a media representative from each franchise. The State Hall selections are made by Wisconsin sports editors and Packer Hall picks are made by a HOF committee which chooses from a master list prepared by the State media.

Eight Packers are in all three Halls - Curly Lambeau, Don Hutson, Johnny Blood, Clarke Hinkle, Mike Michalske, Arnie Herber, Tony Canadeo and Vince Lombardi.

The Canton Hall has received 101 enshrinees in 16 years, including John Unitas, Yale Lary, Ron Mix and Dick Butkus who were inducted in July, 1979.

Packers in Canton and the years they were inducted are: 1963 - Cal Hubbard, Lambeau, Blood and Hutson; 1964 - Hinkle and Michalske; 1966 - Herber; 1971 - Lombardi; 1974 - Canadeo; 1976 - Jim Taylor; 1977 - Bart Starr, Forrest Gregg; 1978 - Ray Nitschke.

The State Hall, which was started in 1951 under resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature, has 69 members whose plaques are in the lobby of the Milwaukee Arena. State Hall enshrinees must either be from Wisconsin or have made their fame in the State.

Packers in the State Hall are: 1951 - Hutson, Hinkle; 1956 - Cub Buck; 1957 - Red Dunn; 1960 - Blood; 1961 - Lambeau; 1967 - Verne Lewellen, Lavvie Dilweg, Herber; 1970 - Michalske; 1973 - Buckets Goldenberg, Canadeo; 1976 - Lombardi; 1978 - Liz Blackbourn.

Four Wisconsin natives who became pro football standouts are in the State Hall: 1964 - Elroy Hirsch; 1967 - Alan Ameche; 1970 - Johnny Sisk; 1976 - Pat Harder.

The Green Bay HOF was started in 1970 and members have been elected every year but 1971. They are enshrined at impressive banquet ceremonies in January or February. Packer HOF members are:

1970 (from the 1920s) - Bernard Darling, Jug Earpe, Dilweg, Hubbard, Lambeau, Lewellen, Blood, Michalske.

1972 (1930s) - Hank Bruder, Milt Gantenbein, Cecil Isbell, Russ Letlow, Joe Laws, George Svendsen, Goldenberg, Herber, Hinkle, Hutson.

1973 (1940s) - Charley Brock, Larry Craig, Bob Forte, Ted Fritsch, Bobby Monnett, Baby Ray, Andy Uram, Dick Wildung, Whitey Woodin, Canadeo.

1974 (1950s) - Al Carmichael, Fred Cone, Bobby Dillon, Howie Ferguson, Bill Forester, Dave Hanner, Bill Howton, John Martinkovic, Jim Ringo, Tobin Rote.

1975 (1960s) - Don Chandler, Willie Davis, Paul Hornung, Henry Jordan, Jerry Kramer, Ron Kramer, Max McGee, Fuzzy Thurston, Lombardi, Taylor.

1976 - Hank Gremminger, Bud Jorgensen, Gary Knafelc, Bob Skoronski, Jesse Whittenton, Dunn.

1977 - Charlie Mathys, Willie Wood, Andrew B. Turnbull, Buck, Starr, Gregg.

1978 - Boyd Dowler, Tiny Engebretsen, Lon Evans, George W. Calhoun, Nitschke.

1979 - Elijah Pitts, Carroll Dale, Pete Tinsley, Nate Barrager and Dominic Olejniczak.

Four members of the Packer Hall are non-players. They are Jorgensen, Packer trainer for over 40 years; Calhoun, former publicist who helped Lambeau form the team; Turnbull, the club's first president who formed the Packer Corporation; and Olejniczak, who is now in his 22nd consecutive year as Packer president.

Life at Quarterback — David Whitehurst had two of his best days against the two Packer opponents shown here. Above, Whitehurst is rushed hard by the Saints' Derland Moore (74) and Richard Neal but he threw four touchdown passes and the Pack won 28-17. Below, Whitehurst gets the shirt treatment from a Seahawk but the Pack won 45-28. Whitehurst completed 22 of 34 passes in the two games for five touchdowns.

David Whitehurst . . . THIS Is His Year

By Tony Walter
Green Bay Press-Gazette

David Whitehurst recognized the play immediately. He knew what was coming next and he didn't really want to see it.

As the film projector purred the pictures of the Packer loss from the day before, Whitehurst watched. He watched himself drop back quickly to pass. He watched his offensive linemen take their pass blocking positions. He watched the defense close in.

Then he saw him!

Right smack dab there in the middle of the screen, in the middle of the field without a defender near him, waving his arms.

It was James Lofton.

Whitehurst winced. Why hadn't he seen his favorite wide receiver 24 hours earlier when it still mattered on the scoreboard? Why did he have to wait to see him now when it mattered to the coaches?

The memory of Lofton unattended and unnoticed has remained with young David Whitehurst through the winter of thought. Missing Lofton on that play didn't cost the Packers the game, or a playoff berth. But the man who holds the team's most crucial position, and is likely to hold it in 1979, believes he must learn from his mistakes of the past season if he is going to improve.

Whitehurst has tucked the memory of that film session where it ought to be, in that portion of his development reserved for more work.

But don't get the impression that Whitehurst has been carrying guilt on his back because of what he and the Packers didn't accomplish in 1978. He isn't.

The graduate of Furman University who was force fed his football maturity, looks back on the season with the same feelings he uses to look ahead — confidence, pride and sensitivity.

"I've been thinking quite a bit about this season coming up," said Whitehurst. "It's probably the most important year as far as my career is concerned. I have more experience and I've really worked hard in the offseason. But I'm still going into the season as an experienced rookie.

"You know, this game is really funny. You can't predict what's going to happen. They're (coaching staff) planning to go with me but if I don't perform, they'll get rid of me. I've still got a lot to prove to myself. Really, I haven't done a real lot yet."

Two years ago, Whitehurst approached his first tryout with the Packers as an inexperienced athlete. He drew very little attention from the media and fans who had become accustomed to avoiding close contact with someone who wasn't expected to be around for long. Whitehurst, it was assumed, wouldn't be in town long enough to visit the Hall of Fame. Lynn Dickey was the Packer quarterback. Everybody knew that.

But not everybody knew that Dickey would drop during the Ram game in Milwaukee. When he did, Whitehurst had the job and kept the Packers away from further damage during the remainder of the 5-9 season.

Last season, Whitehurst prepared for the season knowing he was still the starting quarterback. But he knew that many still expected Dickey to return to reclaim his position. When Dickey couldn't make it, Whitehurst kept the job and led the team to an 8-7-1 record, its first winning record since 1972.

From the fans, Whitehurst got the same grades the team received.

Good job, lots of thrills, better than expected, but not quite good enough.

"I had a respectable year," Whitehurst said. "There were a lot of things I just didn't do well enough. I have to cut down on my interceptions and I have to improve in certain other areas.

"I also have to learn to read blitzes better. I just hope I can learn as much as I did last year," he said.

A lot of people hope so.

When the Packers faded in the homestretch of November and December, Whitehurst's name was bantered about by armchair quarterbacks who were bent upon finding a reason. The normal drift of those conversations went like this: Whitehurst has done all right. He's a good kid. But he's just not the quarterback of the future for the Packers. He's not a championship-caliber player.

Whitehurst heard all of that and it disturbed him.

"Sure, it bothered me a great deal," he said. "The fans have been looking for a quarterback for a long time. I appreciate the support I've gotten but I think some people were forgetting how little experience I had. I had been a starting quarterback for only five games when the season started and everyone expected me to be a seasoned veteran. There aren't too many quarterbacks in the NFL who are starting in the second season. I just hope the fans will be patient. I think I can do the job and I think I can do it now."

Whitehurst isn't alone in that opinion.

He has a significant booster in Packer Assistant Coach Zeke Bratkowski who along with boss Bart Starr, has staked the team's immediate future on the arm and head of Whitehurst.

Bratkowski gives Whitehurst high grades for 1978

"He did far better than we expected," said Bratkowski. "We're very happy with his progress. You have to consider the amount of pressure he was under last year. His shoulder injury reduced his effectiveness and he had to play under some of the worst possible game conditions. Remember, it was snowing in some of the games. But David went ahead and played hurt and

A 10-10-1 RECORD

David Whitehurst has started 21 straight games since he was thrust into action after Lynn Dickey suffered a broken leg Nov. 13, 1978.

Whitehurst presided at two victories in five starts to finish his rookie season and then helped the Packers to 8-7-1 in 1979.

He has attempted 433 passes and completed 218 for 2,727 yards and a completion percentage of 50.3 in 21 games.

he showed us an awful lot of poise."

Whitehurst's confidence is firm but he's a realistic man. He knows, despite the flowery praise from Bratkowski, that the Packer coaching staff wasn't ready to tout him for all-pro on the basis of his 1978 performance.

"After last season, they didn't really praise me but they were encouraging," Whitehurst said. "They told me they believed I could do it but that I had to learn to do some things, like see Lofton when he's wide open."

The college draft in May didn't hurt Whitehurst's outlook on the 1979 season.

"I was really happy with the draft," he said. "First of all, they didn't take a quarterback. Second, between (Eddie Lee) Ivery and (Steve) Atkins we got some runners who can really take some pressure off Terdell (Middleton). I'm not being critical of anyone. I'm just very optimistic about the season coming up. We have a good chance to win our division. We know we can do it but it's going to take hard work."

Another factor in Whitehurst's optimism is the return of the valuable Lofton.

"The way I figure it," Whitehurst said. "the only way to look at it between James and myself is that we're going to get better. I've been working to strengthen my arm so I can get the ball deep to him."

Whitehurst's leadership stock rose substantially during last season. The same quarterback who sheepishly took the reins on national television a year earlier, was outspoken in his criticism of the attitude of some of his teammates at Chicago.

The Packers lost the game in Chicago and subsequently lost a chance at the playoffs because of it. "It bothered me because everyone seemed to think that it would be a foregone conclusion that we'd win down there," Whitehurst said. "I hope everyone learns from that experience."

Whitehurst goes into the 1979 season as the team's starting quarterback. Bratkowski confirmed that. Completely recovered from the shoulder surgery he had after last season, Whitehurst feels Dickey's possible return will not change things, at least at the beginning of the season.

"Last year, I was there and they went with me because Lynn couldn't play," Whitehurst said. "It was the right place at the right time. This year, even if Lynn's healthy, I feel he'll have to take the job away from me."

The Packers didn't draft a quarterback this year, partly because there wasn't a good enough one available at the right times, and partly because the Packers say they don't need a quarterback badly enough to sacrifice some of the other positions.

Bratkowski is hoping for a healthy Dickey, of course, but he is also quick to praise the contributions and potential of second-year quarterback Dennis Sproul.

But this is Whitehurst's year. Relegated to the starting position originally by attrition, able to keep the job last season because of forfeit, he is now preparing for the season he hopes will show everyone that he will be the Packer quarterback of the future — because of talent.

The Big Scoreboard tells the story of the tense overtime Packer-Viking game in Green Bay Nov. 26.

THE LONGEST GAME

Eyes were red. Chins were down. Voices were muffled.

That's how one scribe pictured the Packer dressing room after a tense 10-10, five-quarter tie with the Minnesota Vikings in Green Bay's Lambeau Field Nov. 26, 1978.

It was the longest game ever played by the Packers, beating out the 13 minutes and 39 seconds of overtime in the sudden death victory over the Baltimore Colts in the Division playoff in Green Bay in 1965.

The Packers outgained the Vikings and led from late in the second quarter until the final 10 seconds of regulation play when Fran Tarkenton hurled a five-yard touchdown pass to Ahmad Rashad to tie the score. Both teams missed field goals in the overtime to produce the only tie in the NFL in '78.

Justice probably wasn't served when the Packers failed to win. Coach Bart Starr sensed that the Packers earned more in terms of respect than they lost in the standings (eventually, the Vikings gained the playoffs by virtue of the tie). "This was a darn fine effort on the part of our football team," said Starr, "I'm proud of them. They played their hearts out and it's a shame we didn't win."

The Packers defensed Tarkenton better than they had in years. Fran had four passes intercepted and was sacked three times. He was allowed only 35 net yards passing in the first three quarters.

But Tarkenton found the magic with two minutes left in regulation. The Vikings went 57 yards in 11 plays, all passes, for the TD. Two of the completions came on nerve-wracking fourth down plays.

The Packers drove 70 yards in 12 plays for their TD in the second quarter, with Terdell Middleton going over from the one. Middleton finished with 110 yards in 39 carries to boost him over the 1000-yard mark.

The Packers fumbled three times, including one by Middleton that set up the Vikings' field goal. The Pack drove 49 yards for Chester Marcol's 19-yard field goal, with David Whitehurst passing 20 yards to Rich McGeorge to set it up.

The Packers were handicapped by a 15-yard differential in punting. David Beverly averaged 29 yards on 10 kicks and Minnesota's Greg Coleman averaged 44 in six, thus eliminating any good field position for the Packer defense.

The tie hurt the Packers in the Division race but it was a sort of revenge for a 21-7 loss to the Vikings in Minnesota earlier in the season. Packer errors contributed considerable to the Vikings' success that day. The Pack eliminated most of the mistakes in Green Bay but . . . a tie!

THE RECORD BOOK

Looks at the Top 20

Rich McGeorge, seventh on the Pack's all-time receiving list, catches TD pass against Saints in Milwaukee Sept. 10. On ground is Linebacker Floyd Rice.

The Packers' all-time Top 20 in scoring, rushing and receiving was introduced to Yearbook readers in the late 1960s.

The three lists have at least a dozen new names but the leaders are still the same — Don Hutson in scoring and receiving and Jim Taylor in rushing . . . and it's likely they'll remain on top for another decade. Taylor gained 8,207 yards and Hutson caught 489 passes and scored 823 points.

Only one present Packer has a chance to break one of those records in the reasonably near future.

That would be Chester Marcol, the Pack's kicking specialist who has scored 474 points in seven seasons — an average of 67.7 points per. Marcol kicked 114 field goals and 132 points after touchdown.

Actually, Marcol kicked only six seasons since he missed just about all of 1975 with a leg injury, scoring only three points on one field goal.

Marcol, who scored 63 points in 1978 to rank fourth on the all-time list, needs 350 points to crack Hutson's mark. Assuming Marcol maintains the leg strength and efficiency to kick another seven years, he would have to average just about 50 points a season to become the Pack's top scorer. Chester will turn 30 on Oct. 24.

In the six seasons, Marcol has kicked more PATs than FGs just once. That was in 1978 when the Packers scored 31 touchdowns. Thus, his total pointage was hampered some by the Pack's lack of scoring. Also, moving the goal posts to the end line four years ago cut down on FG attempts but the 16-game schedule should help him in the future.

The top present Packer on the all-time receiving list is Rich McGeorge, who has 176 catches in his nine seasons (actually eight since he missed 1972 with injuries), to rank seventh just behind Taylor. In rushing, Barty Smith ranks 13th on 1,738 yards.

Terdell Middleton, fresh from a 1,000-yard season, has moved into the 20th position with a total of 1,213 yards in two seasons.

Middleton set two Packer records in 1978. He carried 39 times in the five-quarter overtime game against Minnesota to snap the 32 attempts by Jim Grabowski and John Brockington. Terdell carried 33 times in the regulation game.

His other record was most attempts in one season, 284, breaking Brockington's mark by 10 trips. Middleton played a 16-game season, Brock 14.

Dave Beverly set two other Packer records unhappily. Beverly punted 106 times to break his own record of 85 and his total of 341 for four seasons broke the 315 set by Donny Anderson in six.

As in the past, the following Packer records are presented with apologies to all the Packer stars who played before records were kept:

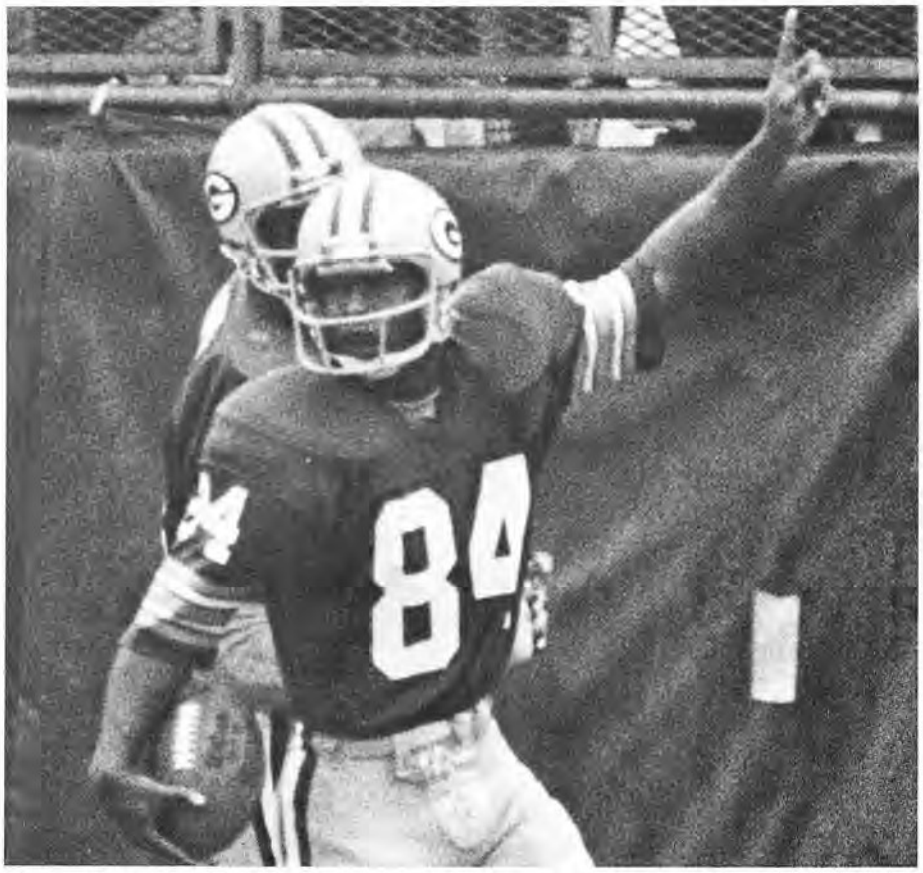
STEVE ODOM . . . A Tribute



Steve Odom flashes No. 1 sign after scoring on 95-yard kickoff return against Saints Sept. 10.

By Mike Kupper
The Milwaukee Journal

". . . and at left linebacker for the Packers, at 5 feet 8 inches and 174 pounds, No. 84, Steve Odom."

Far fetched, of course, but that's where Steve said he'd play if he was big enough . . . He said that last spring.

But Odom won't be playing for the Packers in 1979, and maybe never. Little Steve has decided to retire to pursue his quest toward a doctor's degree in clinical psychology at Rosemead Graduate School of Professional Psychology in LaMirada, Calif.

Odom made up his mind early in June after thinking about it for months, but left a slight crack in the door.

"It's a possibility. If I have the urge and it's not out of my system, which it might not be from talking to other guys who have played, I might come back," Steve said.

Odom pointed out that if he does come back it will be with Green Bay, explaining "that's where my heart is. The fans are so good in Green Bay and Milwaukee and the Packers will be winners. They're winners already but you'll be able to see it more in the future."

This, then, becomes a tribute to the smallest Packer in modern times.

Coach Bart Starr had this to say:

"We hate to lose Steve because he was a terrific little player and because his heart is matched only by his concern for his fellow man. We hope someone with as much dignity and class is about to fill his spot.

Fred vonAppen is the Packers' new special teams coach.

"Steve contributed heavily to our special team success, especially so last year when we sharply reduced his exposure as a receiver and concentrated on his performance with the special teams. Although we're disappointed to lose him, we wish him well and know he'll enjoy many victories in his new field."

Odom, a onetime star at Utah and the Pack's fifth draft choice in 1974, missed the last four games of last season after breaking a bone in his lower right leg, but even so led the National Football League in kickoff returns. He returned 25 kickoffs 677 yards for a 27.1 average and got the Packers off to a fast start in their big 45-28 victory over the Seattle Seahawks in Milwaukee with a 95-yard scoring return of the opening kickoff.

Besides that, he returned 33 punts 298 yards for a nine yard average and caught four passes as a backup receiver — one of them for a touchdown against Dallas and another, on fourth down, to set up the winning field goal in the Packers' 9-7 win over Tampa Bay.

Odom said he has completely healed from his leg break and "in terms of my body I've got some years left. I'm not even sure which leg it was anymore. I played in the Utah alumni game recently and caught a 50-yard bomb."

While Odom is proud of his football accomplishments, he considers the heralded incident with Greg Peeters the highlight of his career in Green Bay.

Steve has been in touch during the off-season with Peeters, the young Packer-Odom fan from Shiocton. You may recall that story from last fall.

Peeters, then 11, was at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Appleton, having both legs amputated after a tractor accident in late September, when Odom visited him.

During the visit, Odom promised that if he scored a touchdown, Greg would get the football and that next Sunday, Odom broke off the 95-yard scoring return against the Seahawks.

"As soon as I broke free, I was really thankful it was going to happen so soon," Odom said at the time. "When I got to the end zone, I thought about it, and I thanked God it came so soon. I was really motivated by Greg."

Later, after Odom had suffered his own injury, he was motivated again by young Peeters. Considering his own injury in the light of what Greg had gone through, Odom found that he really couldn't justify asking those very human questions: Why me? and Why now?

"Greg could certainly sympathize with me and he was very understanding," Odom said. "But he didn't overdo it with the sympathy. He wasn't saying 'Poor Steve,' or anything like that.

"Greg has always been a forward looking guy, and I think that's how he was looking at me then. I think he figured I'd heal up and be back this year."

Odom and Peeters were among the guests of honor in the Appleton Christmas parade and Odom treasures the memories of that. "It was neat to be with him like that," Odom recalled. "There we were, both on crutches."

And the friendship flourished right through the offseason, when the two corresponded and visited. "I invited Greg over in the offseason for a trip to Disneyland when he and his parents were in Los Angeles for a vacation," Odom said.

As the Packers start training for the 1979 season, Odom admits he'll miss football ... and while Greg will continue his hot interest in the Packers it won't be the same without Odom returning those kicks.

Packers Get Strength from Strength

First Draft Choice Eddie Lee Ivery grimaces on Packers' weight machine during break in training.

The Packers are getting strength from strength . . . in the matter of selecting outstanding college players in the draft.

Since the results of the ill-fated John Hadl trade have worn off, the Packers have had three straight drafts in which they've had use of their own first choices.

Starting in 1977, the Packers have gone to what Personnel Director Dick Corrick calls "the strength of the draft" — that is, going to the positions where there are an abundance of standout college players available.

For example, 1977 was the year of the defensive linemen and the Packers picked two greats — Mike Butler and Ezra Johnson. Good linebackers and receivers were plentiful in 1978 and the Packers nabbed two starters — Linebackers John Anderson and Mike Hunt, plus receiver James Lofton. Butler, Anderson and Lofton were NFL all-rookie picks.

The college trend in 1979 was good running backs and Coach Bart Starr responded by selecting RBs with his first two picks — Eddie Lee Ivery of Georgia Tech and Steve Atkins of Maryland.

The NFL went to a 16-game schedule in 1978, resulting in a premium on running backs. The Packers came up with a 1,000-yard performer in Terdell Middleton but his efficiency diminished late in the season — especially after a 39-carry performance in the 13th game. With the addition of Ivery and Atkins, the Packers could go to a four-back offense

The Packers might even have gone to a running back on their third choice had Eddie Hill of Memphis State been available. However, Hill went late in the second round to the Los Angeles Rams and the Packers took the best athlete on the board — Defensive Tackle Charley Johnson of Maryland, who is considered good enough to challenge for a starting position.

Introduced to football when the Packers were winning championships in the 1960s, Ivery was extremely happy about being drafted by Green Bay.

"I've had dreams playing for a team like Green Bay and this seems like a dream come true," he said after the draft in May, adding "I can't go to a better place than Green Bay. They've got a rebuilding team and I'll fit right into the scheme of things."

At 6 feet, 210 pounds, Ivery has exceptional balance and likely will share fullback with Barty Smith and pair up with Middleton.

Ivery is built similar to Jim Taylor (6' 205), the Packers' all-time leading rusher. Taylor, like Ivery, had tremendous balance.

Here are the Packers' 1979 draft choices and the figures in parens designate the order of selection of the 330 players chosen by the 28 teams:

1st Round — Eddie Lee Ivery, RB, Georgia Tech (15).

2nd — Steve Atkins, RB, Maryland (44).

3rd — Charles Johnson, DT, Maryland (71).

4th — Choice traded to Jets as part of Carl Barzilauskas deal.

4th — Choice obtained from Raiders for Mike McCoy and then traded to Redskins for Tim Stokes.

5th — Choice traded to Jets as part of Barzilauskas deal.

6th — Dave Simmons, LB, North Carolina (153).

Fran Tarkenton fires away in his last game against the Packers in Green Bay Nov. 26, 1978.

TWO PACKER

One Goes Away . . Fran

The Minnesota Vikings annually provide the Packers with two headaches . . . home and home.

They are in alphabetical order (1) a staunch defense and (2) Fran Tarkenton.

The defense won't go away . . . It will remain tough and a hard nut for an offense to crack. Example: The Vikings permitted the Packers an average of 8.6 points in their last eight games.

Tarkenton has gone away . . . retired after 18 years in the NFL — six with the Vikings, then five with the New York Giants, and finally seven more with the Vikings.

No player in NFL history has given the Packers more trouble over such a long period of time than Tarkenton.

Compounding the problem, of course, is the fact that the Packers and Vikings are in the same Division and thus play two games each year.

Tarkenton played against the Packers in 28 games, 25 as a Viking and three as a Giant . . . and the final record shows the Packers winning 14 and Tarkenton winning 13. One game ended in a tie.

Tarkenton was one of the charter Vikings when the club was formed in 1961, with Norm Van Broklin as head coach. The Packer powerhouses of the 1960s, while ever mindful of Tarkenton, beat the Vikings and Fran 10 times and lost twice and then trimmed the Fran-led Giants twice. Tarkenton had a 12-2 edge in the 1970s, including one win as a Giant.

In 28 games vs. Green Bay, Tarkenton attempted 724 passes and completed 418 for 4,984 yards and a completion percentage of .57%. He hit Green Bay for 33 TD passes and the Packers intercepted 35. Averagewise, Tarkenton completed 14.9 out of 25 attempts for 178 yards.

Tarkenton has given all teams fits with his scrambling runs and against

HEADACHES

Green Bay he gained 292 yards rushing in 62 scrambles — an average of 4.7.

Tarkenton came up the hard way, so to speak, since Minnesota was an expansion club. And there were many times he was literally running for his life. The Packers won the first six games from the Vikings, but in the first game in 1964 the Vikings scored their first win, 24-23.

Tarkenton scrambled six times for 49 yards in that game and then completed a long pass to Tom Hall to set up the winning field goal by Fred Cox in the waning minutes.

That was the first game Fran's scrambling really was a factor. In the nightcap at Minnesota, Coach Vince Lombardi figured the best way to contain him was to send the defensive ends, Willie Davis and Lionel Aldridge, in "wide." That is, they didn't try to meet at the quarterback. Tarkenton was held to zero yards in one attempt and the Packers went on a scoring rampage to win 42-13, an explosion that would have negated any Tarkenton heroics.

Fran wasn't about to stay put. He ran for 54, 29, 22 and 18 yards in the next four games, one of which the Vikings won 20-17 in Green Bay in 1966.

Oddly enough, Tarkenton never ran once in the three games vs. Green Bay as a Giant. Even with the Vikings in the 1970s, Tarkenton cut down on his scrambling but was always a threat. Bud Grant took over as Viking coach in 1967 and Tarkenton returned to Minnesota in 1972.

Tarkenton's last game against the Pack was a memorable one. Drat it. It was the five-quarter 10-10 tie in Green Bay last Nov. 26. The Packers intercepted four of Fran's passes and sacked him three times but in the last 10 seconds of the regulation game Tarkenton completed a five-yard TD pass to tie the game.

That was Tarkenton's last bit of damage to the Packers ... Now, the Packers won't have Tarkenton to worry about but the Viking defense likely will live on!

The Sideliners make their debut in Green Bay's Lambeau Field Sept. 17, 1978.

Sideliners Veterans Now

By Jon Echternacht
Managing Editor, Packer Report

Bart Starr and Shirley Van have this in common:

They're both looking forward to the return of veterans for their 1979 teams.

You know about Bart . . . But Shirley Who?

Shirley Van is director-coach of the Packer Sideliner Cheerleaders, who made their debut in 1978.

"I'm really excited about our second season," said Ms. Van. "Last year we had to deal with a group of girls with little or no experience and make a cheerleading-dance team out of them. This year we have some veteran professionals and it will be a much easier task to put a team on the field."

Last year 58 girls participated in the first Sideliner tryout session. From that group 40 were selected for the team. The number dwindled to 32 and then to 28 by the end of the season when some girls found out their practice sessions amounted to an average 10 hours a week through the summer and the football season.

Ms. Van says with a year of experience among the majority of the 1979 team, practice sessions should involve no more than six hours a week.

A year of experience for the coach has added a few new wrinkles to the tryout session held in mid-May for the 1979 team.

As before, the girls met in a preliminary session and were given a dance routine to practice for a week and then return for the final audition.

Some 48 girls performed the pre-established routine in groups of four before a panel of six judges and Ms. Van. They did the routine in unison then each performed an individual, improvisational dance to a disco beat. Each girl was also called upon individually to answer questions from the panel.

The personal interviews and the solo dance bit were new additions for this year's tryouts. "I wanted to add the improvisational part because new candidates are not used to working in a dance group and may be a little up tight. These girls, when dancing alone, will show their ability and they shouldn't be eliminated because of their unfamiliarity with group dancing," explained Ms. Van.

As for the individual interviews, "We found out last year the girls were required to talk to various members of the media at the drop of a hat. Persons on the sidelines would stop anyone of them and ask them questions, therefore we feel it is important for a sideliner to be able to speak with poise."

A rap session with the four captains from last year's group, Sherry Servi, 22, DiAnn Stone, 23, Lori Wadzinski, 19, all of Green Bay, and Sue Schwalenberg, 18, of Kaukauna, reveals a strong sense of pride in the organization and exhuberance for the new season.

The veteran's veteran among the captains is Lori. She started her career as an alternate on the former cheerleading group, "The Packerettes," at age 13 and has six years of experience on Lambeau Field turf.

"Working with the Sideliners involves a lot more dance routines and consequently a lot more practice. It is more physically taxing than the routines involved with the Packerettes," she said. "The practices are very tough."

The Sideliners are paid $10 each for games in Green Bay and $15 for games in Milwaukee — not a lot of money in the bank when you consider wear and tear. "The pay just about covers the cost of nylon stockings for a season of cheerleading," said Sherry, "and you can't get by with cheap hose. We have to use the expensive support hose and probably go through two pair a game."

DiAnn remarked, "those three, seven-hour practice sessions the Saturday before a game last season were not easily forgotten either. Saturday night you just had enough energy left to sew the sequins on your uniform and go to bed."

The glamour of the show on the field before more than 50,000 fans is not without its drawbacks. "In the beginning we got a lot of heckling from the drunks in the stands," said Sue, "but as we got better the criticism was less."

Practice sessions are not the only long hours spent in the performance of their duties. For a game in Milwaukee, the girls board a bus in Green Bay at 7 a.m. They arrive about 9:30 and start the task of putting on makeup and doing warm-up exercises in preparation for their three hours of work during the game.

"I'll never forget our first trip to Milwaukee," said Sherry. "We had this bus driver who was all excited about taking the Sideliners to the game in County Stadium. Then we showed up in rollers without makeup and moving very slow at that time of the morning and he couldn't believe this motley crew was the new Packer Cheerleading squad. But by the end of the trip he changed his mind."

The girls play the music of their routines on the bus during the trips to Milwaukee and it helps refine their timing.

The Sideliner captains are in charge of keeping the unity of their groups and calling the signals for the start of a routine. So Sherry has found the occasional use of a crib sheet (she tapes a list of the routines on her arm) valuable, like some quarterbacks who tape a play sheet to their wrists.

It wouldn't seem like there is much incentive for becoming a Sideliner. The pay alone certainly wouldn't draw a crowd, the hours aren't a bargain and it isn't exactly easy work since Ms. Van has the reputation of being a tough task master in teaching the art of dance.

But there does seem to be a wealth of intangibles connected to the job. Ms. Van has always stressed the fact that unlike cheerleaders for other ball clubs who gain some big commercial recognition for their labor, the Sideliners are Packer fans to a woman.

"If I weren't on the field with the Sideliners, I would be in the stands doing much the same thing — cheering for the Packers," said DiAnn.

"There is just a great feeling when you are doing a routine and smiling into the stands and you see the people smiling back telling you that you are doing a good job. That makes it worthwhile," said Sherry.

The Sideliners have found the off season has included many requests for their services. Members of the team have donated their time for countless fund raisers in the Green Bay area.

Ms. Van points out another, greater reward the girls have gained individually. "A year ago you couldn't tell one girl from the other during tryouts," she said. "They have gained so much in poise and maturity from the experience of performing in front of huge crowds."

And all the hard work is starting to mean something. "All our efforts and work last year is starting to turn into fun," said Sue.

The following girls have been selected for the 1979 Sideliners: Robin Guerrero, Lori Wadzinski, DiAnn Stone, Cheryl Zablocki, Julie Allen, Teena Rose Meli, Lorraine Luisher, Candy Neddersen, Barbara Roffers, Margaret Brown, Bobbie Anderson, Cheryl Kozicki, Sherry Servi, Michelle Blindauer and Cheryl Kaye Hanson, all of Green Bay; Sue Kinnard, Luxemburg; Diane Fameree, Casco; Barbara Pankratz, Fond du Lac; Lori Wickes and Lisa Seibold, Oshkosh; Jane Neymeyer, Debbie Beckers and Pam Kowalczyk, De Pere; Jodi Handrich, Berlin; Sue Schwalenberg, Kaukauna; Sue Kinnard, Luxemburg; Lynn Ann Geiger, Brillion; and Jackie Van De Wettering, Greenleaf.

A MONDAY NIGHTER IN GREEN BAY

A Monday Night Game in Green Bay, back-to-back games in Florida, a Saturday afternoon game and two 3 o'clock Sunday starts.

Those are the highlights of the Pack's 1979 National Football League schedule, and the biggie is the appearance of the New England Patriots Monday night, Oct. 1. This will be the first Monday Nighter ever played in Lambeau Field.

The Packers were hosts for three previous Monday Night games but they were all in Milwaukee County Stadium.

Unlike a year ago when they finished the schedule with three straight on the road (Tampa Bay, Chicago and Los Angeles), the Packers this year will be absent from home bases Green Bay and Milwaukee no more than one two-game stretch. They'll visit Orange Country on two straight Sundays — Tampa Bay Oct. 14 and Miami Oct. 21.

Five of the eight league games will be played in Green Bay and three in Milwaukee under the club's rotating schedule policy. They'll split the eight games in 1980.

The 3 o'clock games will send the Lions into Milwaukee Oct. 14 and the Jets into Green Bay Nov. 4. Both games will be the second halves of Sunday national television doubleheaders.

The Saturday afternoon game will pit the Packers against the Lions in Silverdome in the league final Dec. 15. Another 3 o'clock start, the game will be televised nationally.

The Packers will play four teams from the American Conference — Patriots, Dolphins, Jets and Bills. Besides the four in their own division (Buccaneers, Vikings, Bears and Lions home and home), they'll meet the Saints, Falcons, Eagles and Redskins. Four of those teams made the playoffs last year — Division champions Vikings and Patriots and wild card qualifiers Falcons and Dolphins.

The Packers' 12 opponents finished with a won-loss percentage of .497 in 1978. Tops were the Patriots and Dolphins with .688 on 11-5 records.

The Packers will be playing in their 11th Monday Night Game under the present format featuring Howard Cosell. This series was started in 1970, although there were a few Monday nighters played in the 1960s and some were played as far back as the 1940s.

Green Bay played double Monday Nighters in 1970, 1971 and 1973 and single games in 1972, 1974, 1975 and 1977. And the Packers haven't been a ball of fire on Monday night, posting a 3-6-1 record.

Here's the Pack's Monday Night record starting in 1970:

1970 — At Milwaukee: Colts 13, Packers 10; At San Diego: Packers 22, Chargers 20.

1971 — At Atlanta: Falcons 28, Green Bay 21; At Milwaukee: Packers 14, Lions 14.

1972 — At Detroit: Packers 24, Lions 23.

1973 — At Milwaukee: Packers 23, Jets 7; At San Francisco: 49ers 20, Packers 6.

1974 — At Chicago: Bears 10, Packers 9.

1975 — At Denver: Broncos 23, Packers 13.

1977 — At Washington: Redskins 10, Packers 9.

'Tis said Packer fans are getting younger . . . but THIS young?
